

Photographing the home for reproduction in pen & ink...

Clients are asked to provide photographs that show details critical to the design of the custom home portrait. At least one photo should be the exact view that you wish to have drawn. Weather, time of day and season influence lighting. To see shadows clearly, take photos of an east-facing house in the morning and of a west-facing in the afternoon, with the sun a bit above and behind you. The most attractive view is from a slight angle, showing most of the front and a little of the side. If you cannot frame the entire house, take the angle that you would like the home to be drawn.

In close-ups, photograph all details that are unique to your house: front door, door handle, door knocker or decorative fixtures, lighting fixtures, house number, porch railings, front steps and any pillars, decorative brick designs, shutters, leaded glass, stained glass, bay windows or dormers. Show siding and any random designs, any decorative eave supports, roof pattern if slat or tile, chimney, garage door details and anything that may be blocked from view by trees or shrubs in the main photo. Photograph all landscape elements that you wish to have shown in the finished drawing.
